Companion to the New Literatures in English

compiled and edited by Christa <Jansohn>

2002, 232 pages, softcover, USD 52,00/ GBP 29,00, ISBN 978 3 503 06128 0

New Literatures in English⁴ presents seven original essays by leading scholars on one of the most exciting and rapidly expanding areas of literary and cultural studies. In spite of recent vivid interest in the subject there are only very few introductions that offer literary interpretations of single keystexts, whereas the majority of studies either focus on individual writers and their works or on postcolonial theories in general and/or their connection with other critical writings. The present collection wants to remedy this deficiency by offering stimulating and wideranging interpretations of important and influential texts from different genres together with concise information on the diversity and richness of postcolonial literature in general. Their focus is on individual works rather than on a condensed history or survey of postcolonial literature and culture. The essays naturally reflect the particular interests and preferences of their authors as well as differences in methods of approaching their subject. Each essay concludes with a comprehensive and annotated guide to further reading. The volume is designed for those studying the topic for the first time and for more advanced students who have already encountered the field in class or in private reading.
